ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

For over a decade now we have tried to penetrate the complexities in the way people choose and perceive their heroes. At the same time, we have tried to outline carefully how people go beyond the ordinary to transform themselves in heroes. This books represents our efforts to integrate these two elements of heroism science. What constitutes and defines heroism, and how do people construct larger than life images of and stories about the extraordinary people they deem to be heroes? In attempting to answer these questions we have been supported by many colleagues, family, and friends. We are grateful to Dean Sandra Peart of the Jepson School of Leadership Studies and our fellow faculty members Kristin Bezio, Peter Kaufman, and Terry Price at Jepson and Karyn Kuhn, Camilla Nonterah, Matt Lowder, Kristjen Lundberg, Lisa Jobe-Shields, Karen Kochel, and Laura Knouse in the Department of Psychology. Elizabeth DeBusk-Maslanka has been exceptionally helpful in all aspects of editing this volume. She has been a source of wisdom and great generosity. Stephanie Trent helps in many ways to make it easier to do our work, and we are grateful.

At Emerald, we wish to thank Charlotte Maiorana for her interest and support and Charlie Wilson for her wonderful step-by-step guidance through the production process. You have made working with Emerald most rewarding.

Our families have had our backs throughout the months we have worked on this project. In particular, our heroic wives, Marion and Connie, have sustained the romance of marriage that enables us to do our work. We are forever grateful.
