AUTHOR BIOGRAPHIES

James D. Spina

After a long career in public education Jim moved into the private sector and worked as an independent consultant, senior manager of training and development at a large company with over 2,000 employees and later as a director of executive development and succession planning at a Fortune 500 media company. He returned to education as a senior lecturer at the R. H. Smith School of Business at the University of Maryland in the department of organization and management. His PhD was earned at the University of Connecticut in Educational Administration.

Lori J. Spina

Lori began her career as a classroom special education teacher and was quickly promoted to department head. After a number of years in public education, she and her husband Jim formed a management leadership development firm. Primary clients included government agencies, manufacturing, major hotels and law firms as well as small businesses in a variety of industries located throughout the United States and Canada.

Lori was invited to teach Human Resources courses at the University of Maryland where she was a full-time lecturer at the R. H. Smith School of Business. In addition to classes in Maryland, Lori also taught in Zurich and Beijing at the R.H. Smith campuses located in those cities. Currently, Lori and Jim maintain the management consulting business.
