

About the Authors

Murray Anderson-Wallace is Specialist in healthcare communications and Visiting Professor at London South Bank University. He has wide experience of research and development work with networks and other complex non-hierarchical organisational forms. He is an expert in relational practice and has contributed to the growing body of knowledge in the field. He led the conceptual development, research and testing for the Health Foundation, which established the foundation for a major programme on networks.

Becky Malby is Professor in Health Systems Innovation at London South Bank University, a member of the European Cancer Concord, a Board Member at Scaling up Shared Lives, at Unleashing Health Communities (Bromley by Bow Centre), at Shared Haemodialysis Care and at The Health Foundation Readiness for Change Programme. She was the Director at the Centre for Innovation in Health Management at the University of Leeds earlier, where she collaborated on establishing and leading the Leeds Institute for Quality Healthcare. She was the health expert advisor to the Cabinet Office Barriers to Choice Review (2013), a Critical Friend to the NEF/NESTA Coproduction programme and has been a special advisor to The Health Foundation on establishing sustainable learning networks.